

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The editors have incurred debts of gratitude to a number of people in the course of this project. We are most grateful to the active participation and the contribution of all members of the Microdata FY2013 working group. We would like to express our sincere appreciation for the time willingly allocated by all members in conducting their research with tight deadlines and in participating in the project's two long workshops over the course of the project.

The editors owe a great intellectual debt to Professor Shujiro Urata who has provided excellent guidance throughout the course of the project. Professor Urata has been very active in engaging in every steps of the research, starting from the very beginning when the project was designed, during the review of draft reports of the country studies, and at the end when the overall research is finalized.

We also express our special thanks to Professor Fukunari Kimura, chief economist of ERIA, who always supports the existence and implementation of ERIA's Microdata research. Our special thanks also goes to ERIA for its executive's decision to always put the Microdata research in the top list of the Institute's research agenda. This, including the funding support that follows that ensures a continuity of Microdata research to explore the vast uncharted area of research.

We are greatly indebted to ERIA staffs who provide countless administrative and logistical supports that have provided. A successful implementation of the Microdata project in this fiscal year would not have been possible without assistance they provided.
